Call for Proposals

For the workshop portion of the conference, please consider making a proposal to demonstrate or present a learning activity for critique. A roomful of teaching librarians will provide structured and constructive feedback on a learning activity you're planning. Propose one of the following:

1. To demonstrate, for critique, a 15- to 30-minute information literacy learning activity that you would like to use (or use again) in class in the near future.
2. To present, for critique, a learning activity or assessment for use (or re-use) in the near future in an embedded context, like an online discussion prompt, research project, short tutorial, quiz, etc.

To make a proposal, please send the following information to the chair of the conference committee, Professor Brandy Whitlock, at bmwhitlock@aacc.edu by Friday, February 23, 2018:

1. In a paragraph or two, what your demonstration or talk will entail; a general outline is fine
2. Student learning outcomes (what skills students learn or develop as a result of the activity)
3. Optimal amount of time that should be allotted for your demonstration/presentation
4. Resources you will need
5. Short biographical statement(s)

Registration will open on March 5 at the MILEX website: www.milexmd.org/events.html.
Register early, as space will be limited.
