

2018 MILEX Spring Conference Announcement: The Future of Teaching Librarianship

Wednesday, April 11, 2018, 9:30 a.m. – 3:30 p.m.
Loyola Graduate Center, 8890 McGaw Road, Columbia, Maryland

The Maryland Information Literacy Exchange (MILEX) is a collaborative of Maryland academic librarians to promote information literacy in higher education.

Join your colleagues for a day of highly interactive sessions that focus on the future of teaching librarianship. After an engaging keynote, a number of teaching librarians will demonstrate learning activities for conference participants to critique. A roomful of teaching librarians will provide structured and constructive feedback on learning activities planned for the very near future.

Keynote Presenter: Rachel W. Gammons

Rachel W. Gammons is the Head of Teaching and Learning at the University of Maryland Libraries, where she coordinates first-year instruction programs and directs the Research and Teaching Fellowship, a teacher-training program for future academic librarians. She has an MLIS from the University of Tennessee, an MA in English from West Chester University, and is currently pursuing a PhD in Student Affairs at the University of Maryland. Her research interests focus on mentorship for new professionals, critical pedagogy, and intersections between librarianship and student affairs. In 2016, she co-authored User-Centered Design for First-Year Library Instruction Programs. You can find her on the internet @rwegammons.
